Profile

My interests in health and the community originate from three generations of medical professionals. At an early age, I excelled in academics and community service. Through travel, I learned about the health disparities of different communities and cultures. During my medical training, I specialized in community-oriented medicine with a focus in complementary and alternative treatments. After training, I established a private practice in northern California where Cannabis use is prevalent. While documenting the benefits and adversities of Cannabis use, I co-founded a Cannabis research organization focusing on the study of community accessible Cannabis products and their use patterns. My primary research objective involves the analysis of real-world evidence and an assessment of product safety and efficacy.
